Key questions before any trade:

- Is the stock forming a new tight base, or is it simply extended after news-driven gaps?
- Where is the actual invalidation level? If that level is too far away, the setup is not clean.
- Is the move supported by new institutional demand or just retail/short-covering momentum?
- Can earnings convert fast enough to justify the valuation?

Setup checklist for your journal

Question	Pass condition
Is there a new base?	Tight sideways action near highs, declining volume, clear resistance.
Is the pivot obvious?	A clean level multiple traders can see; not a random candle high.
Is risk defined?	Stop based on structure and less than the expected first upside target.
Is volume confirming?	Breakout volume expands; pullback volume dries up.
Is position size small enough?	A normal shakeout should not cause emotional decisions.

9. Conclusion

NVDA screens as: Moderate momentum / strong fundamentals / reasonable value / high risk. Per the methodology, the clean action is to act only on a defined setup — a new tight base, a controlled pullback, or a confirmed reclaim of a key level — with the invalidation point and position size decided before entry. Never chase an extended move.
